THE MAN OF CUNNING.

The keen business sagacity of John D. Rockefeller has its parallel in the cunning sagacity with which he makes his fortunes. He started all in the early twenties upon a venture which within twenty years had made him the richest man in the world. He is leaving millions today which will bring his name tremendous dividends in return a score of years hence.

For what greater fame can be boasted than a name that he shall have forever the world's death knell? For what else can greater credit be given than for bringing about the utter conquest of a terrible disease?

The gifts of Rockefeller to the Institute of Medical Research now aggregating $2,400,000, an increase of $2,000,000 in the past few years. The Institute is thus provided with the most elaborate experimental laboratory in the world and will have, in addition, a hospital where the closest studies may be made of disease. The hospital is, of course, not for experimentation any more than any other hospital, but constitutes an admirable adjunct for purposes of observation and record. Reports from this hospital will necessarily have a higher standing than those of the ordinary institution where study can be only incidental to the main purpose of treatment and where, as a rule, restricted funds will not permit the deepest and longest research.

The desired discipline in which Rockefeller's industrial enterprise is held is being shrewdly offset. The man is more consistently cunning than any other industrialist who has ever turned to philanthropy in order to "square" his record—Fanning County Favorite.

PAY CHEERFULLY.

The man who makes a bill and pays it reluctantly and grumbles about it, is either a very unthoughtful man or else is a bad man at heart. If you buy anything on credit you have been extended a courtesy, and no man of good manners will neglect to pay his obligations, either by cash or check, or anybody anything or move to the mountains and be a hermit. There really isn't room anywhere for the cross and angry party who is eager to use his credit but reluctant to pay for what he gets.—Dallas News.

THE COST OF HIGH LIVING.

In 1885 each individual in the United States consumed on the average 52 pounds of sugar per year. By 1909 the per capita consumption had increased to 82 pounds for each individual per year, an increase of 50 pounds or nearly 60 per cent. The average individual in the United States is constantly consuming more sugar, the average price of sugar tends downward, but the increase of nearly 60 per cent in the per capita consumption results in a tremendous increase for the general consumption of increased cost of living.

The same reasoning applies in a general way to almost everything of common use and consumption among the American people. The average family wears better clothes, uses better furniture, either refrains from owning anything or move to the mountains and be a hermit. There really isn't room anywhere for the cross and angry party who is eager to use his credit but reluctant to pay for what he gets.—Dallas News.

THE DRINKING CUP DANGER.

One of the most successful national campaigns now in progress is directed against the public drinking cup which has long been suspected of spreading the germs of some of the most loathsome and fatal diseases. The public drinking cup has been abolished in every railroad train and station and school house in Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Massachusetts and Iowa. No more public drinking cups are allowed in the schools in California, and twenty or more small cities in various states have abolished the cup. Sixteen railroad companies now provide automatic cup vendors. For one cent one can purchase a clean, sanitary drinking cup. The campaign has made some progress in Texas, but not very much. It is a matter which deserves more attention than it receives. Every person should be provided with a pocket drinking cup, and the little bubbling fountains are easily provided on the school grounds so that no cups are needed.—San Antonio Express.
